

Jessica Haley, MID'12
Principal and Director of Interior Design | RODE Architects

Jessica Haley is a Principal and Director of Interior Design at RODE Architects in Boston's South End.

Since joining in 2013, Jessica has enabled RODE to integrate a more complete, full-service approach to the practice. Her depth of experience has allowed RODE the opportunity to contribute to a range of project types including hospitality, multi-family, corporate, complex institutional and academic research. Jessica brings a unique approach by mixing tried and true design with originality and innovation.

Prior to RODE, Jessica worked at ARC as an interior designer while getting her master's degree in Interior Architecture at The Boston Architectural College (BAC). The concurrent balance of education and practice was crucial in jump-starting her career and setting good habits and work ethic.

Jessica has a Bachelor of Fine Arts degree from The New England School of Art and Design at Suffolk University where she concentrated in figurative painting and sculpture. This training and love for the arts has led to a unique, free-form approach to interior design and architecture.

She remains connected to the BAC as an adjunct faculty member.
